

SUMMARY AND CASA'S POSITION:

Over the past few months, CASA has seen Ben adapt to his environment at McKinley and that he has a supportive team who responds well to his needs. While he is coping the best he can with his situation, CASA feels that Ben is really struggling with his relationship with his mother and wanting to reconnect with his family, especially his grandmother and sister. CASA also believes that mother and maternal grandmother love and want to support Ben, but are struggling with understanding Ben's behaviors and where he is coming from.

Based on CASA's observations, CASA understands that family is important to Ben. CASA has observed that there is tension between mother and Ben, but feels that they still care for each other. CASA believes that reunification is still in Ben's best interest, and that continued therapy would be important for Ben. Given this, CASA recommends family therapy for Ben and his mother as reunification services continue.

In addition, sports seem to be a healthy coping mechanism for Ben and he would benefit from more opportunities to participate in such activities. CASA and Ben have researched possible after-school sports activities for Ben to participate in and CASA has observed that Ben is very eager to participate.

Additionally, CASA would like to see Ben improve his educational outlook so that he can pursue his goals. CASA feels that a tutoring program may help Ben overcome some of his challenges with math.

CASA has found Ben to be an engaging young man, who has great potential. CASA feels that by addressing Ben's mental needs in both individual and family therapy and focusing on his education, Ben can stabilize his current placement.
